FOR RACE AND NATION

COLOURED IMMIGRANTS

THE PAMPERED CLASS THAT CAN DO NO WRONG

Leyland works come to a halt because of union backing for black trouble-maker

A NEW PRIVILEGED CLASS has emerged in Britain. It is given special preferences in housing and employment. Our laws are bent in its favour. Unlike other sections of society, it cannot be criticised or attacked, and special laws exist to protect it from such criticism and attacks. When it transgresses the law of our country, its members are either let off completely or given the most derisory punishments. Town councils in areas where its people live in large numbers lavish public money on supplying it with special amenities that are not available to the rest of the population. No leading public figure may speak other than flatteringly and fawningly of this class if they wish to maintain their position in public life.

This class is Britain's coloured immigrant community.

A perfect example of its privileged and protected status was provided by the case of Zedekiah Mills, a West Indian worker at Leyland's Longbridge plant in Birmingham.

Mills has a long record at the works of troublesome behaviour and insubordination to the management, yet somehow he has been immune to any threat of the sack. In April 1979 he was suspended after he lost his temper and smashed up chairs in the factory's rest room, but he never lost his job.

In April 1981 he received a formal written warning when he disobeyed an order to unload wagons, losing the firm several hours production.

In the Winter of 1982 he refused to work in the rain during voluntary Saturday morning overtime, despite being offered waterproof clothing.

In January 1984 he jumped off his truck and ranted and raved at a supervisor, who retreated.

At the beginning of May 1984 he tried to punch an employee from a firm of outside contractors.

On May 15th 1984 he lost his temper in the factory and had to be forcibly restrained from hitting another worker.

But despite all these incidents Leyland continued to employ him.

Two days later came the last straw. Mills was reported as jumping off his truck, grabbing the foreman's collar and punching him after he was asked to take a different route to his usual one. Leyland management, in exasperation, finally handed him his cards.

But what do you think? At this point the union stepped in and called a strike in Mills' support. 8,500 workers were laid off at Longbridge and a further 1,500 suffered the same fate at Cowley as a consequence.

At the time of going to press Mills' final fate is not known but the gesture of his union in calling a strike to prevent him getting his rightful deserts is typical of the manner in which powerfully placed people in this country (including left-wing union bosses) have made coloured immigrants a specially favoured community in Britain, exempt from the penalties for wrongdoing that come to the rest of us.

SIKHS TAKE OVER LONDON

IT WAS THE TURN of the Sikhs to invade Central London earlier this month, bringing all traffic to a halt and engaging hundreds of our police who could have been better employed on other duties. Previous to this, we had the Libyans fighting their internal battles on our soil. Before that it was the Iranians.

The Sikhs came out on June 10th protesting against Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's alleged suppression of their kinfolk in the Punjab. Whether in fact Mrs. Gandhi's Government was guilty of any such suppression in the Punjab is a matter of supreme indifference to us. What matters to us is that once again our capital city has been made a battleground for conflicts between factions of foreigners NONE OF WHOM should be here.

According to some reports, the Sikhs in London numbered 30,000 and were on the march wielding swords. Why they were not arrested and charged with carrying offensive weapons is a mystery – unless it is because they are just one more among Britain's coloured immigrant communities who are exempt from our laws.

ATTACK ON MODERN ARCHITECTS WELL JUSTIFIED

OUR PAPER and the party it supports have often had reason to criticise the public pronouncements of HRH Prince Charles. It is a change therefore for us to be able to compliment His Royal Highness on a speech, and this we do unreservedly in respect of what he recently said to a gathering of the Royal Institute of British Architects at Hampton Court.

The Prince roundly condemned modern architecture and its creators in Britain for the shapeless monstrosities that have been made of many of the centres of our towns and cities. "For far too long," he said, "some planners and architects have consistently ignored the feelings and wishes of the mass of ordinary people in this country."

"What are we doing," he asked, "to our capital city? What have we done to it since the bombing of the last war? Why can't we have those curves and

POLICE CHIEFS CRAWL TO THEIR ENEMIES

IT NOW APPEARS that senior officers within the police force have accepted the privileged status of the intrusive and aggressive non-white minority in British Society. Not only is any reference to the fearful facts of racial conflict in Britain forbidden, not only are the police prevented from taking account of racial realities in such a way as to restore order to the streets of our cities, it seems that one tiny word of disrespect towards blacks is coming to be accepted by senior officers as sufficient grounds for dismissal from the service.

Because he referred to blacks as "Nig-Nogs" in an off-the-cuff remark during the course of a speech to the Conference of the Police Federation (the police representative body), a senior officer, Inspector Peter Johnson, with 28 years' service in the force, was required, first by the Federation and then by his own Durham Constabulary, to crawl on his belly in abject apology before resigning first his Federation offices and then his membership of the Police Force.

The Chairman of the Federation, Leslie Curtis, like a well-heeled cur in fear of a thrashing from his master, had immediately rebuked Johnson at the Conference for his comment. The obscene grovelling of the assembled "representatives" of the forces of law and order continued as the delegates applauded the later announcement of Johnson's resignation of his Federation offices.

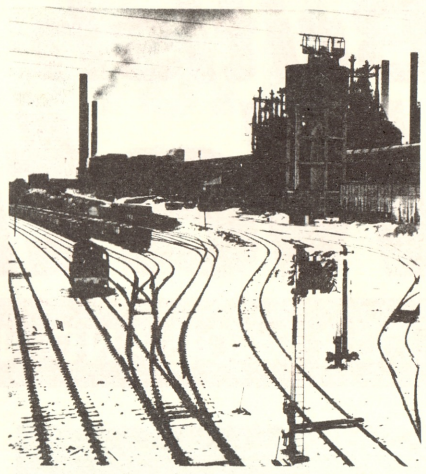
None of this self-abasement in the end prevented the Commission for Racial Equality from swinging into action with a "formal protest" – i.e. veiled threats. The inquisitors of this anti-white body are not about to permit heresies against their sacred dogmas to go unpersecuted. To realists it is hardly surprising that such displays of pathetic weakness should stimulate this offensive and arrogant self-confidence among the hostile alien elements which have been allowed to set up their communites in our midst.

The black population will not be slow to draw an inference that all policemen are equally contemptible. The police in St. Petersburg in 1917 were the first to fall victim to revolutionary mobs which had formed similar conclusions about them.

In common with all other British people, our police must have the courage to face the present-day political reality and make an appropriate decision towards it, as have the police and military of other European countries this century. The facts do not permit neutrality. More important today than any other fact is the revolutionary potential of millions of anti-British aliens in our midst.

British Nationalist, though it believes in racial differences, opposes race-hatred. All those who oppose multi-racialism should attack the politicians who promote it, not the immigrants, who are merely its victims.

GOVERNMENT LETS IMPORTS WRECK BRITISH INDUSTRY



STEEL WORKS AT CORBY
One of the victims of the Government's wrecking policy

IN THE PAST FEW YEARS of Tory government the internationalist economic system has enjoyed maximum freedom of operation. Britain has had her home market in basic heavy industrial goods taken by foreigners with the almost cheerful complicity of the government.

The British market has suffered from the dumping of cut-price foreign goods manufactured by low-paid coolies, whilst our own industry has been deliberately squeezed with the highest interest rates on record, and all restrictions have been removed on the movement of Sterling overseas. International bankers now have absolute freedom to invest in the sweated labour factories of low-wage Afro-Asian and Eastern Bloc countries.

The international financial fraternity strips down Britain's assets at immense profit while the British worker is thrown on the scrapheap.

The most appalling example of this is probably to be found in the steel industry.

BANKERS' MAN

In 1981 the Thatcher government appointed Ian Macgregor as Chairman of the British Steel Corporation. Now Chairman of the National Coal Board, Macgregor was (and is) a servant of Lazard Brothers, one of the most powerful concerns in the Rothschild-dominated cosmopolitan New York banking fraternity. Lazards have substantial steel investments in Third World countries like India and Brazil, and enormous steel holdings in the USSR, Poland, Roumania and elsewhere in the Communist Bloc.

Macgregor acted as hatchet-man. He immediately set about dismantling the British steel industry, thus eliminating high-wage production in this country and helping to concentrate production instead in the low-wage Lazard-owned plants of countries like the USSR (which politicians like Mrs. Thatcher assure us is "a deadly menace to our freedom").

The BSC, under this management, proceeded to sabotage its own production by keeping its prices artificially high during a period of recession. The government took no steps to exclude Soviet and Third World steel, even in the knowledge that the Japanese subsidise and protect their own steel production and that Soviet Bloc suppliers were similarly competing unfairly by means of dumping what they produced at very low, subsidised prices on the British market.

DESTRUCTION OF STEEL

The bureaucrats of the EEC Commission are now planning the final destruction of our steel industry. All EEC nations have suffered from these steel imports. The Commission has reacted by imposing reductions on Community capacity in order to prevent over-production. Our own government has been more compliant than any other.

Meanwhile the process has continued in other areas of industry. Since the Japanese subsidise their own steel industry, they have been able to invade world markets, for example, in shipbuilding. This competition has been permitted by the British government to cripple British shipbuilders. As British shipyards have closed, Japan has trebled its orders for new merchant ships in the 12 months ended March 31st. Japan now wins 86 times as much work as Britain in terms of tonnage. In 1983 British yards produced only 143,961 tons.

Similar processes have been permitted to operate in all other heavy industries.

Thus Britain has been made to pay, by the corruption extending to treachery, of her own governments, for the advancement of alien financial and industrial interests. The price is millions of unemployed, the loss of a large and important part of her capacity to produce, and dependence on foreign (not necessarily friendly) suppliers of vital commodities.

Foreign products allowed to erode national defence capacity

THE GOVERNMENT has continued its policy of procuring foreign weapons systems at the expense of the British arms industry in a series of scandalous decisions.

- The £18-million-pound contract to fit anti-Exocet guns to Royal Navy warships has gone to a Dutch company, despite the superiority of the British model. This is 'justified' by the Government as part of a deal whereby the Dutch navy will purchase in return Rolls Royce engines to power new ships. Rolls Royce is said to need these orders to survive. In fact the firm is only in trouble in the first place because of the policy, both of this and previous governments, of buying American aircraft, both civil and military. If there had been a policy of buying British planes, these would have been powered by Rolls Royce engines.
- The Government's decision to equip new frigates with American Harpoon surface-to-surface missiles instead of the British Aerospace Sea Eagle has rightly been condemned as a betrayal of British industry, technology and jobs. This has come on top of the choice of a foreign competitor to supply the basic jet trainer.

This continues the tradition set by successive Tory and Labour governments whereby independent British high technology projects are cancelled. The cancellation in the nineteen sixties of such projects as Blue Steel and Blue Streak missiles and the TSR2 swing-wing jet in favour of American-built weaponry deprived Britain both of a genuinely independent nuclear capability, backed up by an industry under her own control, and of a world lead in military aviation technology.

The fashionable view in government circles dismisses the importance of control over our own industry and technology. It is a matter of no concern in the corridors of power that such control is basic to the very survival of the nation.

In a time of crisis the application of these internationalist principles in the area of defence could be found to have left Britain in a position where she had not the technological infrastructure necessary for survival. She would become dependent on the grace and favour of foreign powers, whose interests might not coincide with her own, to obtain the most basic military needs. She would continue to live at all only on the terms of others and to the extent that she served their ends.

A 17-YEAR-OLD GIRL who killed her mother in a row over sex was freed recently by Sheffield Crown Court so that she could look after the rest of her family. The killing happened when 39-year-old Janet Downing objected to her daughter sleeping with her fiance. The court was told that Jane – who admitted killing her mother – was "an honest, reliable and friendly girl."

AN ADVERTISEMENT for copying machines which showed a black athlete losing a race has been changed so as to show him winning. Birmingham City Council, who refused to allow the advert to be displayed in taxis in the area, said that the picture of the black runner falling behind was enough to cause offence to ethnic minorities.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS in 'Zimbabwe' have said that rebels in Matabeleland had been responsible for 75 murders and 234 armed robberies in the past six months. In one instance, it was said, two teenage girl teachers were seized and had their noses and ears cut off for 'collaborating' with the government.

LABOUR'S LEADER: A VIEW FROM THE INSIDE

MANY NATIONALISTS find it amusing to observe the juvenile antics of the party politicians, shadow boxing and posturing as they carry out their 'democratic' duties in their make-believe world of government and opposition. For, despite the facade so carefully presented to the public, there often stands revealed, for all to see, the real person beneath.

Take Neil Kinnock, for example. Recently his wife Glenys was interviewed at length on BBC TV's Sixty Minutes about her political beliefs and her life with the leader of the Labour Party, and, whether she intended to or not, she gave us a vivid insight into the character of the man who aspires to be our Prime Minister.

Mrs. Kinnock told the interviewer of the time she became "very angry indeed" when her husband forgot the licence number of their car after it had been 'clamped' by the police. "I was left to pay the fine and sort out the car's documents," she said. "When I got back to the car he was sitting with his feet on the dashboard listening to the football results."

Poor Neil; nothing seems to go right for him. Some weeks ago, as he was about to leave on a tour of the United States to make his mark as an international politician, he was informed that he had been elected Man of the Year by Gay News, the queers' own 'newspaper'. To add to all his misfortunes, he has Tony Benn and Arthur Scargill behaving like petulant but dangerous schoolboys, running round his heels, doing their utmost to bring the Labour movement crashing down. Come to think of it, he didn't start off too well either, for shortly after being elected leader of the Labour Party he fell into the sea while posing with his wife in front of a battery of press and TV cameras.

After all that and his wife's revelations to the world about some of his human frailties, underneath the new image of plastered down hair and sober suit, Neil Kinnock must be cringeing with embarrassment!

The last invasion?

Roman, Saxon, Norman & Viking conquests did not destroy Britain but the present conquest by coloured immigrants is another matter, says KEN USHER

BRITAIN has been subject to many threats of invasion in her long history, but she has always survived them. In most cases the invaders were repelled by the fighting spirit of our people. Where the invasions were successful, we benefitted in the long run because they brought to our country new peoples of similar race, who in time blended with and enriched the original stock.

But the invasion from which we suffer today is an entirely different one, for it is an invasion by peoples of wholly alien racial background who, if they mix substantially with the native British, will eventually destroy this country.

Anglo-Saxons settled first in eastern England and, with the end of Roman rule, many more began arriving from the continent. When first they began to settle, many battles took place between the native war chiefs among whom may have been the legendary King Arthur. This delayed the settlement of the Saxons. Let it be noted here that in those great days Kings and Queens joined their armies in combat, unlike their counterparts today, who indulge in fawning over black immigrants.

By the 7th Century the Anglo-Saxons were firmly established, and most of what is now England (Angleland) was settled by them. In post-Roman Britain the country was split into two parts, the Anglo-Saxon kingdoms to the East and the Celtic kingdoms to the West. The political structure which emerged in Anglo-Saxon Britain was called the Heptarchy; it consisted of seven major kingdoms: Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, East Anglia, Mercia (the Midlands) and Northumbria.

One of Britain's great Queens was Boadicea, the leader of the Celtic Iceni tribe. During Roman rule in 60 AD she lead many battles against the invaders of her country. I am quite sure she would turn in her grave if she saw the present-day Royals pampering to alien invaders. Rare pictures of Boadicea show her to be a woman with long blonde hair and blue eyes, and in combat she was a match for any man. In those great days you had to battle to stay alive; the strongest of will pulled through. Today in Britain you can just sit on your backside and let the state take care of you.

NO RACIAL THREAT

It is a fact that of all the invasions suffered by Britain none is more dangerous to our racial heritage than the invasion taking place today. The invasions of the past have been racially acceptable, all the different tribes who settled here being white and adding to the unique flavour we call British – unlike the black invaders today who, no matter how you look at them, can never be termed 'British'. The Greeks and Romans before us eventually succumbed to a similar alien invasion and died as peoples, and unless radical steps are taken the British will go along that same road.

No matter how far advanced our society gets, if our people continue to crossbreed at the present rate everything past generations fought and died for will have been in vain. It is hard to believe, looking back, that our Anglo-Saxon and Celtic forebears built this great nation and created the greatest Empire the world has ever known, looking at the little men who now sit in Parliament and who are quite happy to see our heartland turned into an Afro-Asian slum.

If there is anything we can learn from our Anglo-Saxon and Celtic past, it must be the determination to battle and fight for a future for the white people of this land. Before very long our people's instinct for racial survival will come forth in a flood of anger and resentment against those aliens who are coming into this land. We must be ready to channel that positive drive into political action, to get our people to turn their anger, not on the immigrants, but on the traitors who now sit in the House of Commons and call themselves 'politicians'. Once this happens, we can flush down the drain pipe of history all those who have betrayed Britain and the British people.

Historically, the Anglo-Saxons and Celts were independent peoples. Before the Norman invasion of 1066 the Anglo-Saxons wanted nothing to do with the Continent of Europe. After the invasion the Normans themselves admitted an admiration for the Anglo-Saxon fine arts, which the Norman invaders from then on studied with fascination.

Of all the people to invade these islands, the Vikings were a powerful and forceful foe. They first came in 793 and later, under the command of Guthrum, clearly represented a very formidable force. Unlike the Anglo-Saxons, split up into different regions, the Vikings were under a united command. They attacked the West Saxon area, which was on the main side-line areas of Danish settlement in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire and adjacent counties. Moreover, after the defeat of Mercia the Viking army divided, and part of it came South to East Anglia from whence it attacked Wessex in 878. Alfred the Great, King of Wessex, was hard pressed to survive the Viking onslaught. The Viking leader Guthrum tried to surprise Alfred during his celebration of the 12 days of Christmas at Chippenham but Alfred escaped to wage guerilla warfare from the marshes around Athelney. In a pitched battle at Edington, Alfred and his Saxons defeated Guthrum.

In York, which had become a Viking kingdom, the challenge was a formidable one, for here the Danes were reinforced by Norsemen. Anglo-Saxon fighting spirit was once again shown by Alfred's grandson, Athelstan, who defeated a mighty Viking, Scottish and North British coalition at Brunanburn in 937, but it was not until 954, when Anglo-Saxon Northumbrians themselves slew the Norse king Eric Bloodaxe, that the Vikings at York were defeated. One thing should be noted by all Nationalists and that is that even in the past the Anglo-Saxon race was divided as today through regional differences. This is something that undermines the organisation of the Anglo-Saxon state. It is those regional differences that those who seek to destroy our British heritage are still using today, pitting region against region and dividing us internally. A people, and especially a race, must be united if it is to move forward. Those in our society who seek to end the life of the Anglo-Saxon white race see a divided race as their chance to finish us off once and for all. Time after time, the Anglo-Saxons had to face the continual threat of invasion, yet when they did they came out fighting. It was this fight that became respected throughout the European Continent. It is that same fighting spirit which is needed today to stop this invasion of racial aliens, for unless we resist it, this will be one invasion that will destroy us.

arches that express feeling in design?" The Prince went on to say that the City's Mansion House Square project, now before a public enquiry, would leave St. Paul's dwarfed by yet another glass stump better suited to downtown Chicago.

NO PUNCHES PULLED

His Royal Highness is to be praised for pulling no punches in his speech and for being prepared to risk the considerable controversy that has resulted from it, treading as he did on the sacred toes of many a powerful eminence in the architectural world who was present to hear the speech.

Nearly all modern architecture is rubbish. It is a rotten creation that symbolises the spirit of a rotten age. It is utterly devoid of anything to commend it except in the eyes of those who make fat profits out of its economy of money and space. It has mutilated Britain's once fair landscape and it is a constant affront to the mass of people who have to live and walk in the midst of it and, in many cases, finance it from out of their own rates and taxes.

We hope a day will come when all this ghastly mess will be pulled down. In the meantime we welcome any voice among those of public influence which articulates the sentiments of most of us in condemning the visual hell which modern architects have erected – even the voice of Prince Charles, whom we do not ordinarily regard as an ally!

YOUR LETTERS

Sir,–Last come first served!

I refer to Lambeth Council's decision to allow Boat People to be housed in two weeks, while someone like myself, who was born and has lived in Lambeth for 21 years, and lives now in one room, with no electricity, no gas, no hot water and no cooking facilities, has to wait for months, if not years, for accommodation.

When I last 'phoned Lambeth Council Waiting List Office to ask how much longer I would have to wait I was told (by a man with an Indian accent) that I was not eligible since I did not have enough Housing Points and I might have to wait for two or three years, and that some people have been waiting for as long as twenty years.

I have once prior to, and once since, the Council visit invited the Environmental Health Authorities to inspect the property, and they have classified it as sub-standard, lacking in hygiene and cooking facilities. Lambeth Council informed me that I might have to wait for twenty years.

It should be clear to the most simple of simpletons that something is radically wrong with this country when British people are pushed to the back in jobs, housing and welfare for the sake of aliens.

ALAN MACAREE,
Clapham, London SW4

Sir,–Your paper drew attention last month to a festering sore in this country when you spoke of the foreign political factions who fight their battles out on British soil and to the inconvenience of the British police and public. Recently it was the Libyans, pro- and anti-Gaddafi. Before that it was the Iranians, pro- and anti-Ayatollah Khomeini. Now the latest is the conflict between the Punjabis and the Indian Government, which has been brought to the streets of London.

I ask: what the hell are all these people doing here? Isn't it about time that we sent them all, and whatever faction they belong to, packing back to their countries of origin where, as far as I am concerned, they can battle with each other to their hearts' content!

P. L. STAPLES,
Thames Ditton, Surrey

Sir, I hear that Mrs. Thatcher gave South African Prime Minister Botha a lecture against Apartheid on the occasion of his visit here.

What a damned impertinence! Why in heaven's name invite a foreign statesman to this country in the first place if the object is to preach to him how to run his country's internal affairs?

And if this is Mrs. Thatcher's policy perhaps she had better invite here the heads of all the other African states and deliver a few of her sermons to them – for compared with the state of their countries that of South Africa is a paragon of peace, order and prosperity – for non-Whites as well as for Whites.

BNP defies meeting ban in Bradford

IN BRADFORD on June 2nd the British National Party snatched a propaganda victory from out of the jaws of what threatened to be a tactical defeat when it held its scheduled rally on a hillside on Baildon Moor, just within the Bradford city limits, after a campaign led by the City Council had prevented the party from staging an indoor rally in the city.

The Council cancelled a booking originally made for the City Library as soon as it realised the purpose of the meeting. It then sent its ferrets all over Bradford to enquire into any other bookings of premises for the same date made by any organisation under whatever name. This closed all possibilities to the BNP of having an indoor rally in the city centre. A hotel room was booked on the outskirts of Bradford area by covert methods but this too was cancelled by the management after approaches had been made to them hinting that the BNP might be behind it. The cancellation was communicated to the party half an hour before the scheduled start of the meeting, thus necessitating emergency arrangements at the very last minute to find an alternative venue.

After a hall in Leeds had been considered but turned down due to its location and cost, it was decided to hold the rally on the moor. Obviously, the party would be preaching to an empty audience apart from its own supporters and the nearby sheep, but this was regarded as preferable to holding no rally at all, while the choice of the moor location lent colour to the story surrounding the BNP's visit to Bradford and helped the party to get big headlines in the local newspaper, The Telegraph & Argus, on the following Monday.

In addition to its report of the rally, the paper also reported an interview with John Tyndall taking place in a Bradford hotel in the morning. In the report considerable space was given to the party's policies.

In the publicity preceding and following June 2nd the BNP has now made a really big impact in Bradford and impressed itself upon possibly a hundred thousand Bradfordians as their sole voice in opposition to the ruinous multi-racial policies that have been imposed upon the city and its people.

More and more young turning to Nationalism

BRITAIN'S YOUNGER GENERATIONS are turning increasingly to Nationalism as a way out of the country's problems. That is the finding of a survey recently conducted among school students in the West Midlands by a research team from Birmingham University.

The survey was conducted last year among 2,500 school fifth formers of the ages of 15 and 16. It established that no less than 14 per-cent of white students questioned named Nationalist parties as their first choice when they became of voting age. And a further 16 per-cent named Nationalist parties as their second choice.

In other words, no less than 30 per-cent of the youngsters questioned said that they either would definitely vote, or might possibly vote, for Nationalism.

This 30 per-cent total represents a doubling of the figure of pro-Nationalist school students established by a similar survey in the same area in 1980, according to researchers Raymond Cochrane and Michael Billig.

Such figures will come as a dramatic jolt to the establishment and the other enemies of Nationalism who have complacently believed that it is on the decline in Britain following the poor electoral showing of the last 5 years. In fact this electoral showing is something that we have always claimed as a purely transitory phenomenon, conditioned largely by an on-the-surface swing to the right by the Tories in response to the growing Nationalist challenge in the middle to late 1970s and the alarm this generated in Conservative Central Office.

There are signs now that the credibility of the Thatcher Government as a 'patriotic' force is now running out, and that the Nationalist movement may well make an electoral comeback in the next year or two. However, whether this should happen or not, the longer term prospect for Nationalism in Britain is immensely encouraging, if this survey is any indication of developing trends. A few years from now those presently in their teens will be part of the voting public — indeed the students recently interviewed in the West Midlands, and those of their age elsewhere, will be eligible to vote in only 2 or 3 years.

And what is perhaps most revealing about the two surveys, that taking place in 1980 and the one held last year, is the spectacular increase in the support for Nationalism registered over that comparatively short period. This is despite the tremendous pressure existing in schools, in the West Midlands and elsewhere, upon children to adopt left-wing political attitudes, as are predominant among their teachers. Indeed in some schools students are positively intimidated by the teaching establishment against displaying Nationalist sentiments — so that the pro-Nationalist feeling among students may well be even higher than is indicated by the figures arrived at in the Birmingham University survey.

The message to Nationalists is clear: our hope lies in tomorrow's generation. We may continue for a while to experience frustration at the polls, but all the time a process of great change is taking place in this country. An older generation the majority of which has never been able to understand our ideals is gradually dying out and a new generation is taking its place, a generation whose minds are uncluttered by old prejudices conditioned by decades of propaganda which has stifled serious thought about Britain's future. In this new generation lies Britain's great hope.

Mis-reporting by NF

The cutting produced below caused us some little amusement. It comes from National Front News and speaks of NF newspaper sellers in Church Street, Liverpool, being threatened by the City Council.

In fact there have been no NF newspaper sales in Church Street, Liverpool, at all. The sellers whom the Council was threatening were those of the British National Party and the paper they have been selling is British Nationalist. We have this on reliable authority from the BNP Liverpool branch, who are active in the Church Street area for over a year and have never seen the NF there.

Labour livid in Liverpool

LABOUR COUNCILLORS in Liverpool are livid over complaints made by black representatives of the City's Race Relations Committee that police officers have been seen "fraternising, laughing and joking with National Front newspaper sellers on Liverpool's Church Street.

Councillor Derek Hatton said "If we had the powers we would stop this selling of National Front papers, but we can't because its not a proscribed organisation. Its up to the sheer weight of the Labour movement to stop these sales."

LEGISLATION

The council is at present examining legislation concerning the use of public highways to see if the National Front members can be stopped from selling the papers from below a massive Union Jack raised by other supporters.
